TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN

Dear Sir/Madam,

RE: LETTER OF RECOMMENDATION

This letter is to affirm that (Name of the student) has worked with Rehab Physicians for a period of one month during his on-the-job training. During the internship, he has shown great commitment towards his duties. He has also laid down several strategies to improve academic standards, as well as discipline among students and teachers. Despite being a medical student, he behaved in a professional way offering satisfaction to both the patients and the staff. In addition, he evinced efficiency in time management and behavior change. In times of emergency, he is always available and ready to offer everything he can.

Considering that these positive aspects revealed during his course period, the above traits portray the competence in medical practices.

His experience and skills related to cooperation with patients, as well as ability to promote teamwork together with problem solving skills have been valuable virtues. These professional traits, when combined with his personal qualities, made him a suitable applicant for the medical career. One of the most positive personal traits of this medical student are intelligence, teachability, kindness, patience, and understanding. He can be of great value to any organization that will agree to utilize his services. It is worthy of note that other students feel encouraged by his support in attending hospital inmates and his patient handling skills. Patients also like his services and assistance. He is always willing to do what other students do not want to take care of. Owing to his well-grounded knowledge, he can certainly count on re-employment with our hospital, should the opportunity arise.

Any hospital considering this person for work has my most enthusiastic approval. If his operation here is any sign, he is designed to acquire new summits in his profession, and set recommendable accounts for future employer, as he did here.

Yours Faithfully,
